- The village of Cipran is 45 km east-northeast of Plovdiv, on the Plovdiv-Stara Zagora road. A new barracks has been built at the southern edge of the village. The barracks consists of a two-story command building, 22 by 75 m; a one-story hospital, 20 by 40 m; a two-story quarters and assembly hall, 20 by 70 m; a three-story quarters, 25 by 95 m; a one-story magazine, 20 by 40 m; a one-story stable, 20 by 40 m. The complex has a capacity of 750 to 800 men.
- It is occupied by a rifle battalion [REDACTED] 25X1B. The unit is subordinate to the regimental command in Stara Zagora. The men have bright red shoulder boards.
- The commander is Capt. Dinkoff, 35 years old. There is a staff company, about 55 men, with pistols and Soviet rifles; a communications platoon, 35 men, a mortar platoon, 30 to 34 men, with two 82 mm mortars, four machine-pistols, 27 or 28 rifles; an AT platoon, 34 to 36 men, with two 57 mm AT guns, five machine-pistols, 26 rifles; 1st Rifle Company, 85 to 90 men, five pistols, 16 machine-pistols, 45 rifles, nine Degtyarev light machine guns; 2nd Rifle Company, commanded by Lt. Georgieff, 80 to 85 men, armed as the previous; 3rd Rifle Company, 80 to 82 men, armed as the 1st Company; a heavy machine gun company, 86 to 90 men, with 12 Maxim heavy machine guns, 12 machine-pistols, 48 rifles, five pistols.
- In Oct 1952 the battalion received 180 to 200 recruits, mostly from northern Bulgaria.
- Recruit training began at once and continued until 1 Apr 53. After the first three months recruits were assigned to specialist formations, such as heavy machine guns and AT. Training was extremely hard. Under new orders recruits were required to exercise even in the heaviest weather. The training officers were never satisfied with the results of target practice. At each target shoot, which took place twice a week, 25 bullets were allotted to each man. During each month there was a night alarm. The regimental commander inspected the unit monthly. Political training took place for an hour three times weekly.
